In this fascinating book a practicing psychiatrist explains how psychiatric symptoms often mask medical disorders. This important issue is vividly illustrated in a number of intriguing case histories--such as a businessman, who was labeled as depressed, but really had syphilis. To help readers protect themselves from this kind of misdiagnosis, the author provides a detailed "24-Hour-Day Profile" which they can use to track their behaviors and activities in order to shed light on what may be an easily treatable underlying medical problem.
